Two Full Time Midwives being recruited for South Shore Community Midwives

The Nova Scotia Midwifery program was established in April 2009. It currently comprises of three sites: one urban and two rural. The two rural sites are the South Shore Community Midwives based in Lunenburg, and the Highland Community Midwives based in Antigonish.

As a result of recent investment in the Midwifery service we are hiring two permanent full time Registered Midwives on the South Shore, creating a team of three Midwives who will ensure the ongoing sustainability of the practice in this community.

Midwives are employed by the Nova Scotia Health Authority, and are well respected members of the local maternity care team. The Midwives have established excellent collaborative relationships with nurses, obstetricians, family physicians and nurse practitioners in the area. The teams are small, but cohesive and mutually supportive, both in our hospitals and in the local communities.

The South Shore Community Midwives provide primary care midwifery in the Canadian model to the residents of Nova Scotia's South Shore. Each Midwife has a case load of around three clients per month, has privileges at South Shore Regional Hospital in Bridgewater, and a 30–40% home birth rate. We enjoy serving a diverse clientele throughout the South Shore region. Our clinic is located in the charming town of Lunenburg, by the sea.

The South Shore has several picturesque small towns scattered throughout the rural landscape, with beautiful beaches, rivers and pristine coastline; lovely inland forests and many parks. Sail, surf, cycle or stroll – our varied landscape offers abundant outdoor opportunities. Our small communities are rich in history as evidenced in our unique and well preserved architecture. South Shore is host to a variety of organic farms, and weekly farmers' markets in the summer. A lively music scene, several projects around local sustainable living and strong, growing communities make the South Shore a beautiful and engaging place to live and work.
